2023 Sample Response: King Lear

Knowledge application	Organisation and development	In the play, Lear is destroyed because of his misplaced trust. Discuss.	Textual features
Analysis of the ways ideas underpin the literary text examines how the text is underpinned by cultural assumptions, attitudes, values or beliefs provides an authoritative interpretation of these cultural assumptions, attitudes, values or beliefs Analysis of perspectives and representations examines relevant perspective/s or representations in the text provides an authoritative interpretation of these perspective/s or representations	Development provides a discriminating thesis that responds to the question/task develops arguments to strengthen the thesis across the response provides clear conclusions based on the arguments Cohesion uses cohesive devices to connect, develop, emphasise and transition between ideas within paragraphs and across the response Selection and synthesis provides a well-considered selection of evidence from the text	In Shakespeare's King Lear, the inferior, ego-driven judgment of the titular character in matters of trust is directly responsible for his downfall. Lear errs in eschewing Cordelia's sincerity in favour of the fake idolatry of his other daughters, Goneril and Regan. He exacerbates this error by disregarding his Fool's warnings about his rash decision-making and, when ejected from his former realm into the wilderness, turns to the rambling philosophies of Poor Tom as a pathetic alternative to self-trust. Lear's eventual demise is ostensibly triggered by the death of Cordelia; however, a more accurate contention is that Lear is destroyed because of the poor judgments that ensue from his misplaced trust. The play opens with Gloucester's portentous comment to Kent that Lear, who is planning to divide his kingdom, will do so with 'equalities [that] are so weighed'. This sets up a key trait: Lear's tendency to politicise matters that would better be left to the heart. His terrible decision to 'weigh' the division of his kingdom on false rhetoric clearly indicates his inability to correctly understand his daughters and place his trust accordingly. In addition, the fact that he feels he must divide the kingdom rather than rule himself because of a need to 'shake all care and business from our age' indicates a chronic lack of self-trust. His divisional blustering, masquerading as the need to turn to others for love, masks the real issue: that Lear cannot engage in honest self-appraisal. In matters of trust, he cannot even turn to himself. As the scene develops, Shakespeare ensures that flattery ousts integrity. Lear decides to trust, without prompting, the syrupy claims of Goneril, who claims to love him 'more than word can yield the matter' and Regan who is 'made of that self mettle'. He is similarly quick to decry the honesty of his youngest daughter, Cordelia, who is determined to reject the 'glib and oily art' and respond to her father with the 'right fit', that is, with no more or less love than he deserves. In disclaiming 'all paternal care' for Cordelia, and in violently banishing Kent who advises against such rashness, Lear demonstrates both his lack of foresight and his inability or unwillingness to trust in those who dare to challenge the preset rigidity of his ideas.	Language choices uses vocabulary with discrimination to develop ideas uses register appropriate to the role of essay writer with discrimination Grammar and sentence structure uses a range of grammatically accurate sentence structures to develop ideas Spelling uses simple and complex words that are mostly spelt correctly Punctuation uses punctuation accurately and purposefully
Analysis of the writer's choices examines how the writer's stylistic or aesthetic choices shape the text provides an authoritative interpretation of these stylistic or aesthetic choices	uses this explicitly to support arguments Throughout Sequencing and organisation demonstrates logical sequencing of information and ideas in and between paragraphs	By the end of this abrasive opening scene, the circle of mistrust is complete: Lear has sided with treachery. In so doing, he has exiled sincerity and its quiet companion, love. The unequivocal, inevitable patterning of Lear's misplaced trust continues. He accepts 'Caius' into his retinue, despite Kent's alter ego professing to own the very same qualities — including 'honest counsel' and delivering 'a plain message bluntly' — that Kent had. This clearly demonstrates Lear's inability to know who, or more significantly, how, to trust. When the Fool, as a flinty arbiter of truth, tries to point out Lear's iniquity using the metaphor of an egg and 'two crowns', Lear threatens to have him whipped. The Fool's response, that Lear has 'pared thy wit o'both sides and left nothing i'th'middle', proves to be prescient when Goneril and Regan both renege on their earlier professions of unqualified love and reject Lear's presence in their houses using the folly of his over-sized retinue as an excuse. By Act III, the pivotal point of Shakespearean drama, the king's misplacement of his trust has led, inevitably, to his exile onto a storm-blasted heath, where 'this tempest in my mind doth from my senses take all feeling'. In one of the many ironies of the play, Lear is assisted at this point by Gloucester, who will also perish because of misplaced trust, an indirect result of the actions of his treacherous, bastard son, Edmund. Gloucester can set aside Lear's bombast and continue to love him by providing him with shelter and trying to protect the king from an impending assassination plot. Lear offers Gloucester a begrudging level of trust but also finds a new accord with Edgar's fabrication, Poor Tom, valued as a 'noble philosopher' who may shed some light on the inexplicable treacheries of the common world. While this may temporarily gladden Lear's heart, it is also a sign of his inability to look within and see that his arrogant determination to conjoin himself with those who are least deserving has been the major source of his downfall. Throughout the play, Lear has been obtuse to love, sincerity and truth. The pathos of this situation is exemplified when he re-joins the blinded Gloucester and realises that these two men, both formerly powerful, now victims of their own moral sightlessness, can now do little more than 'wawl and cry' on 'this great stage of fools' (Act 4, Scene 6). From this point on, Lear's destruction is assured; the decisions made in Act 1 Scene 1 will have their final consequence. His howl at Cordelia's death is accompanied by the terrible knowledge that he 'might have saved her' had he trusted in her initial declaration of love. Lear is destroyed because of his misplaced trust. In privileging the disingenuousness of Goneril and Regan, and rejecting, harshly and violently, the truths of Cordelia and the Fool,
		the old king places himself on a slippery slope to doom. Had Lear known himself better, this progression could have been halted. Instead, he is left with nihilism, a kingdom and family destroyed and himself with no more to do than gaze in vain at the deathly pale lips of his beloved daughter.
